Dear Sisters, Brothers, and Children in Jesus Christ,

The characteristic style of a Christian disciple consists of utter simplicity, complete trust, and total generosity. Jesus tells his disciples as they are sent out two by two, not to take with them anything beyond what is their basic requirements. And they are to live by the mercy of those who will welcome them into their homes and towns. They must preach the gospel, God's peace and justice.

We live in a world that is governed by principles quite contrary to what Jesus commanded his disciples to possess. As such, it is not easy to live a life of true discipleship in the present society. We see not just individuals but nations and governments operating from ulterior, selfish, and self-centered motives. How can we preach the gospel to them if we ourselves are not honest, genuine, and sincere in what we believe in and in what we are called to put into practice?

Often, I understand my life of discipleship as nothing more than my membership in an institutional establishment called the Catholic Church. And my responsibility is nothing more than doing the bare minimum, namely Sunday Church attendance and may be some financial contribution towards my parish. Do I care to proclaim the gospel values through a life-long commitment? Do I bring Jesus' message to people?

Remember that the apostles did not create their own messages. Instead, they brought Jesus' message to people. It was not their opinions that they shared. It was God's truth they upheld in all circumstances. All the prophets in Old Testament began their prophecies by stating: 'Thus says the Lord'. In other words, they were convinced that it was God's words that they were communicating. Do we have courage to declare that it is indeed God who speaks through us? In short, are we acting as God's instruments, God's agents in the world that is surrounded by so much of ungodliness?

It's a time for soul searching...And let's hope that we discover where we stand.

Yours in Christ Jesus,
Fr. C. P. Varghese
Pastor
